PBA Launches Statewide Child Support Public Education Campaign

In an effort to educate Pennsylvanians about changes in state child support laws, the Pennsylvania Bar Association's Client and Community Relations Committee launched its statewide "Your Kids Come First" public education campaign March 27 at the state Capitol.

Joining with PBA President Louis N. Teti and Committee Chair Thomas M. Golden for the campaign's kick-off news conference were Philadelphia Judge Pamela Pryor Dembe, president of the State Conference of Trial Judges; Mary Cushing Doherty, chair of the Pennsylvania Bar Association Family Law Section; and Richard K. Betts, immediate past president, Domestic Relations Association of Pennsylvania.

"Child support is an issue of great concern to many Pennsylvanians and their children. The guidelines surrounding the awarding of support in Pennsylvania were changed last year, and they still are not fully understood by the public," said Teti. "The 'Your Kids Come First' public education campaign is designed to educate people about the support law changes, make parents aware of new guidelines and eligibility, and protect the interests of children."

The PBA's child support educational effort, which ran March 27 through April 10, focused on issues related to the new guidelines, such as the sharing of day care and health care costs, support order changes, and the relationship between seeing the children and paying support. Such issues were addressed statewide at local bar association-sponsored events, including free public seminars, radio call-in programs and informational expos. The campaign is funded through grants from the Pennsylvania Bar Foundation and the Pennsylvania Bar Trust.

A series of ads highlighting legal questions and the campaign toll-free hotline number of (888) 799-4557 to receive the free PBA Guide to Child Support in Pennsylvania appeared in most newspapers statewide during the campaign. These ads were the result of a partnership between the PBA and the Pennsylvania Newspapers Association.

"We are pleased that thirty-one local bar associations, common pleas judges, and domestic relations officers across the state joined with the PBA for this important project," said Golden. "Through this campaign, we are hoping that everyone involved in support issues will be reminded that children should, indeed, always come first."

Pennsylvania and Montgomery Bar Associations Offer Attorneys Alternative Method for Finding Software

In the newly-opened software resource center in the Montgomery Bar Association's (MBA) computer training center, attorneys and legal administrators can determine whether time and billing, case management, real estate, bankruptcy and other software is right for their offices without first fending off sales people or installing the software.

"Normally attorneys ask someone else what (software) they are using and then sometimes just purchase it, and are often surprised and disappointed," said Ellen Freedman, CLM, law practice management coordinator for the PBA who organized the opening of the center. "They may have a salesperson do a quickie demo, which only highlights the strongest points of the software," she continued, "Or they may rely on a demo disk which does not demonstrate the full product." Finally, said Freedman, attorneys can sometimes use full packages on a trial basis, but they are usually reluctant to install the software on their own.

The software resource center offers an alternative. MBA members, members of surrounding county bar associations and their office administrators can visit the center and test full-blown versions of these popular and lesser-known software packages at no cost: Abacus Case Management, Gryphon Case Management, CaseMaster III, Easy Soft Case Management, Juris Time and Billing, TABS III, QuickBooks, Bookmaster - HUD 1 Plus, Collection Master, Worldox, Quick & Easy Federal Estate Tax Form, CaseView I, Bankruptcy Master, Blankrupter, Easy HUD, Best Case, OmniForm Filler 3.0, Debtmaster and Quick & Easy Federal Estate Tax Forms. The PBA plans to offer at least twelve additional packages.

The PBA and MBA plan to place a reference book in the center which will contain information on the cost of the available packages, compatibility with other programs and contact for purchasing.

The software resource center will remain open to members of surrounding county bar associations unless and until overcrowding occurs. Freedman hopes to set up similar centers with several other county bar associations in Pennsylvania.

"Montgomery County was an ideal location for our pilot center," said Freedman, "because they have a commitment to assisting their attorneys in using automation to work smarter, and they have the hardware in place." George Cardenas, the MBA's MIS manager, installed the software.

Contact John Ringwood at (610) 279-9660, ext. 211, for computer room availability before visiting the center. To contact Ellen Freedman, call 800-932-0311, ext. 2228 or e-mail her at lawpractice@pabar.org. □

How to...Seize the Future, Part I of a Series

Submitted to the PBA by Maryland State Bar Association President, James L. Thompson

On Nov. 5 and 6, 1999, I attended a very valuable conference in Phoenix, Arizona, entitled "Seize the Future." The conference was co-produced by the ABA Law Practice Management Section and Lotus. Along with the information given by the program speakers, we received books written by many of the speakers including Tom Peters' book entitled "The Professional Service Firm," his book entitled "The Work Matters," two books by Gary Hamel, one entitled "Competing for the Future," and the other entitled "Alliance Advantage," a book by Roberta Katz entitled "Justice Matters," a video cassette by Lotus entitled "Knowledge Management: Beyond the Hype," two additional cd's, one by Lotus and one by the AICPA. In addition to this, the conference has its own web site with information and data on the conference at www.futurelaw.com. My name is Jim Thompson, President of the Maryland State Bar Association (MSBA), and these are my notes from the conference plus some of my questions and observations.

The conference started off with a bang. Our first speaker was Tom Peters. He is a very dynamic nationally known writer, speaker and business consultant. He wanted to acquaint us with the revolution which is taking place in the business community as a result of the internet. These are "bizarre times." Microsoft is worth more than GM, Ford, Boeing, Sears, Lockheed plus seven other Fortune 500 companies. What does this mean?

- Once every 1,000 years we have a change such as what we are seeing now.
- This is the age of talent. Incumbency and history are no longer that important. How does a company get talent?
- Ninety percent of white collar jobs that we know today will be gone or unrecognizable within the next ten years. That giant sucking sound is the middlemen (e.g. distributors of products and information such as stockbrokers, insurance salesmen, car dealers, tax preparers and lawyers) being sucked out of the global economy.
- The problem is not how to get new innovative thoughts into your mind, but how to get the old ones out. This is especially difficult for successful people but necessary in the age of the internet. Incrementalism is our worst enemy. Generally, it is much easier to kill an organization than to change it. Many existing corporations such as Amway are in the process of creating internet companies to eliminate the parent company within ten years. e.g. Quickstar. Does this mean that our bar associations and firms will be replaced by new competitors or entirely new types of organizations? Quite possibly.

- Business' objective should not only be to be the best but to be considered the only ones who do what you do -- Jerry Garcia.
- He believes that our businesses need a massive transfusion of talent and talent, he believes, is mostly to be found among non-conformist, dissenters and rebels -- not exclusively the top ten percent of the Harvard class of 1999. Diversity is very important for creativity. Diversity deals with "stuff that does not fit comfortably together."
- Eighty-five percent of what goes on within a business is nonsense.
